A Letter from the Directors

When A.R. Gurney first wrote Love Letters, he had, at the suggestion of his literary agent, submitted it to The New Yorker for their consideration. He was stunned when he received a swift response rejecting the work. His surprise wasn't in the quick rebuff, but in the reason for the rejection. They said, "Sorry, we don't publish plays."

The New Yorker's letter was news to Pete because he hadn't written it as a play. It was an "epistolary novel."

And then he thought, wait a minute, maybe they're right...

And it turned out they were. Love Letters' circuitous route to the stage gave A.R. Gurney, already a revered and prolific playwright as well as a Pulitzer Prize finalist for Drama, more productions than any of his other plays.

Letters have been around for a while. Of the 27 books in the Bible, 21 of them are letters. These days, social media posts might be considered letters – with many likes and shares from the Corinthians and the Romans!

Pete gives us two fictional characters in this play whose exchanges span from 1937 to 1985, before cellphones, before texts, before Twitter – just a pen in cursive letters and two thumping hearts.
